

It's time for residential property managers to rethink the food delivery experience

The coronavirus pandemic is motivating property managers to reevaluate every aspect of the tenant experience. That includes food delivery, which has increased dramatically during the outbreak. If you manage a multi-family residential building, allowing food delivery workers to make face-to-face deliveries can put your tenants and staff at risk. And letting food deliveries pile up in the lobby is a recipe for chaos. Tenants want to pick up their food safely and at their convenience. Are you giving them what they want?
